

Death on the Dart.

It was a long time ago.

John and Michael were flying in their private plane from Totnes to Florida, they were going back home.

Suddenly there was an explosion in both engines, smoke started coming into the plane from the engines.

They had to eject because the plane was going to crash.

They had an inflatable lifeboat which they landed in the water, it was orange, so they could see it.

A parliament of owls flew into the engines of the plane, because they were up in the sky looking for mice below.

The pilots had with them 2 unlucky charms, which they only remembered 10 seconds before the owls collided with them.

It was very windy, and very, very cold.

Suddenly there were eaten by a kraken.

Their remains were found at Dartmouth, they were washed up on the beach.